AUIA’S POST-HEARING BRIEF

Pursuant to the instructions of the Administrative Law Judge at the close of hearing, the ARIZONA UTILITY INVESTORS ASSOCIATION (AUIA) hereby submits its post-hearing brief in the above-captioned matter.

INTRODUCTION

AUIA and other parties to the proposed settlement agreement have documented fully in their pre-filed testimony the many benefits that flow to consumers from the price cap plan that forms the substance of the agreement. Every party to the settlement has asserted that it meets the Commission’s public interest standard and urges the Commission to adopt it as the resolution to this case.

AUIA will not use this space to recount all of the returns recognized by the settling parties except to outline the broad public interest that is served by the settlement.

There is universal agreement that Qwest requires an infusion of new revenue to offset significant loss of market share and that it needs to have greater flexibility in product pricing and marketing in order to compete effectively. The proposed price cap plan addresses both of these needs prospectively and it does so without imposing a general rate increase on Qwest's customers.

The risk is all on Qwest to find the right balance between revenue needs and competitive pressures, but it is critical to consumers for Qwest to have the economic opportunity because, while Qwest is no longer a pure monopoly, it still provides the backbone of telecommunications service in Arizona and is the state's provider of last resort.

At hearing, the only party to offer testimony in opposition to the settlement agreement was the Residential Utility Consumers Office (RUCO). At bottom, RUCO produced two recommendations to the Commission:

1) To require Qwest to apply a $12 million credit to customers' bills, amortized over one year, to indemnify the productivity adjustment incurred on April 1, 2005 under the old price cap plan.

2) To reject the settlement agreement entirely and proceed to a litigated hearing.

While RUCO may view these recommendations as separable, they must be viewed together in terms of arriving at a rational price cap plan that serves the interests of consumers, Qwest and other providers, as the settlement does.

Taken together, the RUCO proposals do not advance the cause of consumers any further than the settlement agreement does. In fact, the recommendation to undertake a fully litigated proceeding entails substantially more risk to consumers than the settlement agreement, based on the positions taken by the all of the parties in their pre-filed direct cases. Clearly, several more months of delay in reaching a decision in this case will be damaging to the company and its shareholders.

RUCO's statements are, in some cases, contradictory and sprinkled with errors, omissions and misstatements about the settlement agreement. In addition, RUCO's expressed concerns are very broad and vague and RUCO does not tell us what they expect to achieve or how they expect to get there through a litigated proceeding. All of this leads to serious doubt about what would be achieved by rejecting the settlement agreement and extending this proceeding any further.
THE PRODUCTIVITY ADJUSTOR

The settling parties have agreed to dispense with the productivity adjustor (PA) in the revised price cap plan as being inappropriate in today's market. As Staff witness Matthew Rowell put it, "In an environment in which revenues are declining and customers are being lost, a productivity adjustor is no longer appropriate. In such an environment, competition provides an incentive for the company to operate efficiently." 1

In her responsive testimony, RUCO witness Marylee Diaz Cortez did not explicitly advocate continuing the PA, but she disagreed with the settlement agreement's method of disposing of the $12 million PA incurred on April 1, 2005.

Ms. Diaz Cortez urges the Commission to dispose of the obligation by forcing Qwest to issue a $12 million credit to customers' bills, pro-rated for the number of months the old plan remained in effect beyond April 1 and amortized over the first year of the new price cap plan. She recommends that the credit be applied to charges for basic residential and business services, 2 although the current plan requires only that the PA be applied to Basket 1 services.

At hearing, Ms. Diaz Cortez conceded that Decision No. 67734 does not specify a method for providing customers with the benefit of the PA and that the current plan doesn't require that it be applied to basic business and residential services or to residential rates at all. 3

The settlement agreement proposes to subtract the PA liability from Qwest's first-year revenue requirement under the new price cap plan and to reduce by that amount the revenues available from flexible pricing in the new mix of Basket 2 services. 4

Staff witness Elijah Abinah testified that Qwest has previously met the requirements of the PA by reducing rates on 15 different Basket 1 services and that nine of those services would now be located in Basket 2. Thus, he concluded that

3 See Tr. @ 480, 486 & 491
4 See Staff Ex. 38 @ 6 applying the $12 million to this group of services closely approximates the previous application of the PA.5

Mr. Abinah also argued that RUCO's proposal would produce ratepayer confusion by briefly lowering basic rates and then causing them to increase again automatically.6

In the view of the settling parties, the proposed disposition of the PA meets the requirement of Decision No. 67734 that the new price cap plan "include full credit" to ratepayers for the value of the productivity adjustment.7

Every party to this case has acknowledged that Qwest is financially stressed.
RUCO, in fact, identified a revenue deficiency of $160 million in its direct case.8 In such circumstances, it makes little sense to kick off a rate relief program by forcing the company to relinquish nearly $12 million in cash proceeds.

AUA is constrained to point out, without assigning blame in any direction, that the April 1, 2005 productivity adjustment is an issue in this case only because the revised price cap plan was not adjudicated in the 20 months (now 28) after Qwest filed for revisions.

The Commission should reject RUCO's argument and adopt the treatment of the productivity adjustment in the settlement agreement.

LITIGATION SHOULD BE A NON-STARTER

RUCO witness Dr. Ben Johnson urges the Commission to reject the settlement agreement and order a fully litigated hearing on the parties' original positions. In addition to criticisms of specific provisions of the new price cap plan, he asserts that the plan fails to address three broad issues: geographic cost differences; geographic competitive differences; and the need for an improved Arizona universal service fund (AUSF).9

In discussing these differences, Dr. Johnson makes the rather obvious point that cost differentials exist between service areas and that higher service costs and stronger barriers to entry tend to prevail in rural areas as compared with higher density urban centers. He complains that the settlement agreement does not adeately address these differences.\(^{10}\)

Beyond that observation, Dr. Johnson fails to explain what objectives RUCO would seek in a litigated hearing. Nevertheless, he asserts that “no further testimony needs to be submitted,” and “the Commission can go directly to a full hearing...”\(^{11}\)

Yet, his testimony at hearing was that, “We don’t have enough data to know on net balance how well or how poorly Qwest is doing on the competitive battlefield.”\(^{12}\) Elsewhere, Dr. Johnson asserted that Qwest’s services should be assigned to baskets primarily on the basis of competitive intensity.\(^{13}\)

Qwest witness Jerrold Thompson responded that Dr. Johnson’s approach to aligning services within baskets would require a very long and complex process of examining market conditions and the competitiveness of Qwest services within individual wire centers.\(^{14}\)

Under cross-examination, Dr. Johnson indicated that under his proposal as many as 150 wire centers “would be appearing in different baskets, depending on the degree of competition.”\(^{15}\) Exactly how the Commission could perform this analysis based on the information in the record is a mystery.

Given the fact that there was virtually no agreement on major issues in the parties’ direct cases, such as Qwest’s proposal to create competitive zones, it is hard to comprehend how a litigated hearing would produce a well reasoned result without sending the key parties back to the drawing board to find a consensus.

Dr. Johnson is somewhat more explicit in discussing the need for an improved AUSF.\(^{16}\) RUCO may be correct that a more robust AUSF is necessary to help equalize service costs in rural areas. Indeed, Qwest’s direct case included a proposal to beef up the Arizona AUSF.

However, the reasoning that prevailed among the settling parties was that AUSF revisions should be considered in a separate commission docket, in large part because providers other than those involved in this proceeding would be affected by AUSF adjustments.\textsuperscript{17}

Staff witness Rowell testified that a separate generic AUSF docket has been established and RUCO has offered no changes there, nor did Dr. Johnson recommend any in his direct testimony in this proceeding.\textsuperscript{18} In addition, Mr. Rowell asserted that the record lacks any real evidence that changes to the AUSF would promote rural competition.\textsuperscript{19}

The need for AUSF improvements is not a sufficient reason to reject the settlement agreement in this case.

RUCO CRITICISMS ARE OFF BASE

If RUCO’s objectives in a litigated hearing are less than precise, their criticisms of the amended price cap plan are less than accurate.

Dr. Johnson’s chief concern is that the settlement agreement will give Qwest excessive price flexibility in rural areas where it has relatively little competition.\textsuperscript{20} However, as Mr. Thompson testified, Qwest is subject to statewide pricing under the settlement agreement until the Commission orders a new pricing structure, effectively obviating Dr. Johnson’s concern.\textsuperscript{21} Mr. Rowell also testified that Qwest would be unable to raise rural rates without raising rates in urban areas where the company would be at risk for losing customers to competitors.\textsuperscript{22}

Such an elementary misinterpretation of the settlement agreement is disturbing and it casts serious doubt on the outcome of a litigated proceeding.

Dr. Johnson’s complaint about excessive price flexibility exposes a series of contradictions in RUCO’s positions.

Mr. Rowell demonstrated that geographic pricing flexibility, which RUCO supported, and the basket structure advocated by RUCO in its direct case would allow for more pricing flexibility than is contained in the settlement agreement. He noted that Dr. Johnson, in his direct testimony, advocated a 25% cap on rate increases for services that are currently in Basket 1, but now criticizes the settlement agreement for including most of those services in a new basket with a similar 25% cap.\textsuperscript{24}

Indeed, Dr. Johnson’s conflicting views continued on cross-examination when he testified that all residential local exchange services should be placed in a basket with moderate price flexibility in all wire centers except Phoenix main and Tucson main. When asked whether that would expose all residential service to extreme price changes, he said, “Yes, that’s true in a sense.”\textsuperscript{25}

There are more discrepancies in RUCO’s interpretation of the price cap plan:

- Dr. Johnson asserted in his responsive testimony that Basket 2 revenues can be increased by $43.8 million when, in fact, the increases can’t exceed $13.8 million.\textsuperscript{26}
At hearing, he corrected this error, calling it “a typo.”\textsuperscript{27}
- Dr. Johnson wrongly testified that zone increment charges will no longer be hard capped, when, in fact, they will be reduced and placed in Basket 1, and he claimed that Caller ID Block is moving to Basket 2 when it is remaining in Basket 1.\textsuperscript{28}
Dr. Johnson also corrected these errors at hearing, saying they were mistakes “based on the testimony of the people who wrote the settlement.”\textsuperscript{29}
- Dr. Johnson asserted that Qwest could raise rates for additional access lines to unlimited monopoly levels, but provided no support for that assertion.\textsuperscript{30}
- In his analysis of the amended rate cap plan, as he was warning of too much price flexibility, he failed to note that it would transfer six services from Basket 3 to Basket 1.\textsuperscript{31}
- Finally, Dr. Johnson claimed that Qwest will have “complete freedom” to raise prices for local exchange packages, when, in reality, the settlement agreement

RUCO IGNORES REVENUE NEEDS, CONSUMER GAINS

In his opposing testimony, Dr. Johnson avoids any real discussion of Qwest’s revenue requirement and which rates and charges would have to be increased to cure the deficiency.33 This, in spite of RUO’s determination that the company is facing a revenue deficiency of $160 million.

Dr. Johnson seems to believe that an acceptable price cap plan would only allow Qwest to reduce prices. He complains that the changes allowed in the settlement agreement “go almost entirely in the opposite direction...”34

He is absorbed by his disproven theory that the new price cap plan “will enable Qwest to extract additional revenues and profits from markets where the Company continues to enjoy a substantial degree of monopoly power...”35 and he is unmoved by the Commission’s legal responsibilities in setting rates.

Rather than fulfilling a revenue deficiency by imposing a general rate increase, the settlement agreement provides Qwest an opportunity to increase annual revenues by $31.8 million through increased but limited price flexibility. In satisfaction of the Commission’s legal responsibilities, the agreement also includes a determination of fair value and a finding that the permitted range of rates is just and reasonable. All of these matters would have to be litigated anew under Dr. Johnson’s recommendation to the Commission.

Through Dr. Johnson’s testimony, RUO also chooses to ignore the substantial consumer benefits that would be delivered by the settlement agreement. Briefly, these include:

- Some $4.5 million of annual price reductions, including zone increment charges and non-published listings.
- An additional $1 million in assistance for the qualified medically needy.
- A two-thirds increase in the construction credit for rural residential installations.

Increased service quality standards.

Dismissal of Qwest's pending consolidated court appeals, which comprise a significant risk to consumers.

CONCLUSION

The parties to the proposed settlement agreement have demonstrated conclusively that the agreement and the amended price cap plan are in the public interest and that they provide a balanced set of benefits that meet the needs of Qwest, its customers and the competitive market.

RUCO's opposing arguments are shallow and incomplete and their imperfect understanding of the settlement agreement must give the Commission pause in terms of what could be accomplished by ordering a fully litigated hearing at this stage of the proceeding. RUCO's testimony is also contradictory in assessing the competitive market and the quality of information available in the record upon which the Commission could base a decision that would address broad competitive issues.

Based on the starting positions of the parties, a litigated proceeding could produce nothing but losers. The revenue requirement could be higher. The pricing flexibility could be more, not less. The reduction in access charges could be more or less. The benefits to consumers could be fewer.

If RUCO's approach to pricing were adopted, many months of market study would ensue before a sound decision could be reached.

And regardless of the possible upside, the company and its shareholders would suffer from months of indecision and inability to respond in a timely and effective manner to competitive pressures. More lost market share. More lost revenue.

The industry needs to move on. AUIA urges the Commission to accept the recommendation of the settling parties and adopt the settlement agreement and the amended price cap plan.
