In the Matter of the Application of Arizona Public Service Company for Approval of Net Metering Cost Shift Solution.

Exceptions to the Recommended Opinion and Order

The Commissioners have all the authority and information that they need in order to rule on APS's request.

Legal Issue: Authority under Scates

We agree with the majority of the parties that the ACC has the authority to decide the Reset Application outside of the context of a rate case. While the ROO does not rule on the ACC's authority in this Application, the ROO does not site a lack of authority as part of its rationale for dismissing the Application. We believe that the ACC is on solid legal ground and has the authority to decide this case. (See ROO footnote 7 for positions of parties on this issue).

If the ACC agrees that they have the legal authority to act, then we move on to policy issues. Assuming that the ACC CAN rule on the Reset Application, SHOULD the ACC rule on the Reset Application? We believe that the ACC should indeed rule on the Application and should grant the company’s request in this proceeding and then look toward a more comprehensive solution in the company’s upcoming rates case.

Policy Issue: Comprehensive versus Interim Solution

The ROO is correct in Conclusion of Law 3 that: “The issues raised by the Reset Application are rate design issues which will be more reasonably and appropriately dealt with in the context of a full rate case proceeding.” Indeed we would actually go further and say that many of the issues raised by the Reset Application are rate design issues that can ONLY be dealt with in the context of a full rate case proceeding. The Company plans to file a full rate case in 2016 and it is quite possible that these rate design issues could be addressed in early to mid 2017—two years from now. However, the ability of the ACC to initiate a comprehensive solution within two years is no reason to defer providing a partial solution now. The Reset Application provides the ACC with the ability to make an immediate, revenue neutral and rather surgical adjustment to the existing rate structure while still deferring the comprehensive rate design issues until the full rate case. We support that approach.

Policy Issue: Sufficient Information

In footnote 26 of the ROO, the Judge correctly points out that there is technically no evidence in this case. The parties have made numerous filings but those filings have not been sponsored by witnesses or subjected to cross examination. However, when making policy decisions, a lack of formal evidence does not mean a lack of information. The Commissioners will, of course, have to determine how much weight they will give to each of the filings, but the parties have had ample opportunity to present their positions. Furthermore, the Reset Application is just that...

1 Frankly, we doubt the filings would be more probative if they met the standards of “evidence.” If policy positions could be proven through sworn testimony, then the debates between Keynesians and monetarists—or indeed Armenians and Calvinists—would have long ago been settled.
“reset” application. The original mechanism was established in a rate case and the first reset was accomplished after parties filed significant amounts of refresh material.

Policy Issue: Judicial Economy

The flip side of having a process that does not generate enough evidence is having a process that generates too much. APS’s 2016 rate filing will require a full-blown hearing which will compel the parties—as well as the ACC itself—to commit significant resources. Several parties² have argued that the Reset Application could also require significant legal resources and have expressed the concern that the cases may even overlap temporally as well as procedurally and substantially. One solution, of course, would have been to ensure that any hearings associated with the Reset Application be narrowly tailored to the specific issues of the filing and not be allowed to drift into the broader rate design issues that are more appropriately handled in the rate case or into the broader policy issues reserved for the Generic Proceeding. That is easier said than done. The ROO’s suggestion of dismissing the case solves the problem as well, and is perhaps the best example of judicial economy. However, the judicial savings associated with dismissal would be more than offset by the lost opportunity to take a step toward solving these issues a full two years before the ACC can implement a more comprehensive solution.

There is a middle path between extensive litigation and outright dismissal. After all, we know that the parties will be litigating the full range of issues in the upcoming rate case; that process will start in less than a year. That means that any judicial economy to be gained in the two cases will have to be gained from the current application. Fortunately that middle way is easy to find—that is because the ACC chose that path last year. The ROO provides an excellent procedural summary of the filings, counter filings, letters and responses that preceded the ACC’s decision last year to implement the current $.70 KW charge. Here, the parties have engaged in a similar process of filings and counter fillings and the ACC can simply engage in the same process that it did last year—read the filings, propose amendments, bring the parties together at Open Meeting and vote for the level of surcharge that the Commissioners deem appropriate. Then remind the participants that this is an interim step and that APS will soon be filing a full-blown rate case in which these issues will be fully litigated in a forum in which the Commissioners can provide a more comprehensive solution.

The AzCPA recommends that the ACC choose this middle path.

Conclusion

The Reset Application presents one legal issue and several policy issues. The legal issue is a threshold issue and fortunately is not exceptionally complex or controversial. We believe that the ACC has the authority to rule on the Reset Application.

The policy issues are for the Commissioners to determine. Do they have enough information from the parties in order to rule on the application? Do they want to take this interim step before they provide a more comprehensive solution next year? We believe that they have sufficient information and that deciding the issue on an interim basis now and on a more comprehensive basis in the upcoming case would be the best policy to adopt.
